A STATE BANQUET.

ABOUT FORMAL WHITE HOUSE DIN-NERS, PAST AND PRESENT.

The Highest Social Event in Washington Life-The Invitations and the Guesta. Flowers, Sculpture, Wines and the Most Exquisite Cookery.

The president gave his first state dinner not a great while ago. It was to the cabinet, and each guest received a heavily engraved invitation inclosed in an envelope, which bears the national coat of arms. The White House paper and cards have a gigantic cagle printed in gold upon them. It bears a gold shield on its breast, and its beak holds the words "E Pluribus Unum." The card of You are preparing to take a journey there are certain things absolutely necessary to a traveler's safety and comfort—a through ticket that you are positive is good and at a price that you know is the lowest possible to be obtained anywhere.

Nesident and Mrs. Clevelend request the pleasure of the company of — at dinner on — evening, at — o'clock, 1888."

These dinners last savoral house at the price of the company of the c invitation to a state dinner is almost as big guests first assemble in the East room, and it artist is here that the president and Mrs. Cleveland receive them. They go to the table at once, and there they eat often as high as twenty courses. The dinner just mentioned was on of thirty covers, and the state dining table was set in its ordinary form. There are three ways in which the table may be arranged, according to the number of guests who are to be seated, and the table, as it usually stands, is fitted to seat thirty-six. It is a long oval, and it runs the full length of the state dining room. When more than the state dining room. When more than thirty-six sit down it is changed by adding to each end, making in one shape a gigantic letter "I," and in another, by hollowing out the sides, a figure like the stand of an anvil. The dining room is gorgeous during a state dimer. It is a great oblong parlor, as large as the ground floor of a house thirty feet wide and forty feet deep, and its ceiling is so high that it would reach to the base of the windows of the second story of a city house. It lies at the left of the great promenade cor-ridor, and its windows look out on the Potomac and the monument. It adjoins the Red parlor on the east, and it has windows on the opposite side of the room which look into the

The flowers of a state dinner table are be-yond description, and the florist puts his best efforts on the gold lake which lies in the cen-ter of the table. This lake runs nearly the whole length of the table, and it is a mirror with a gold rim about three inches high, and this, during a great state dinner, is framed with the choicest of flowers and greens. A thousand roses are often used at state dinners, and about the same number of carnation pinks. During a single season the state dinners have consumed 6,000 sprays of lilies of the valley, 400 strings of similax and thousands of other flowers, such as camellias and callalilies. At times canoes are made, and ships of flowers in full sail are seated upon the table. At others there may be bridges and castles, and once there was a design which represented the Hanging Gardens of Semiramis. To these flowers is added the brilliance of the state china, and the wine sparkles in cut glass.

It goes without saying that guests at state dinners always appear in full dress. The men wear boiled shirts and the decollete dress prevails, as a rule, with the ladies. At the dinner referred to Mrs. Fairchild's dress was decollete and Mrs. Endicott's dress was well filled in with lace at the front. Mrs. Gen. Joe Hawley were a blue satin train of silver brocade and her corsage was low, and Mrs. J. V. L. Pruyn wore a ruby velvet, with a low necked waist. Mrs. Whitney appeared in pearl gray satin, and Mrs. Ingalls looked regal in a trained robe of black velvet.

The men looked well, too, and Bayard walked out with Mrs. Cleveland, while the president sat with Miss Bayard on his right, Speaker Carlisle looks like a statesman in a swallow tail coat, and Senator Hearst was straighter than ever in his claw hammer garment. Secretary Lamar appeared almost judicial, with his long hair hanging down over his collar, and Admiral Porter and Gen. Sheridan were as courtly as usual. thirty such guests around this big table, let the light glitter, make the wine flow and add the gorgeous table decorations and you have some idea of the scene. Bring on waiters in full dress suits and have the darkeyed steward presiding over the whole, and you may begin to appreciate a state dinner.

To this, however, must be added the food, and it comes on in shapes that please your eye while at the same time it tickles your Free reclining chair cars are now running on all trains on the C. K. & N. railway, "Rock Island Route." between Wichita, Topeka, Kansas City, St. Joseph, Chicago, St. Louis.

gu while at the same time it tickies your stomach. The cook of the White House gets a better salary than a New York bookkeeper, and he is as much of an artist as some of the big chefs of Eurona. He builds his dishes with the care of the painter or the sculptor, and castles and boats and nearly every object in nature is represented by him in the form that the dishes assume on the state dinner table. At the recent dinner there was a curious stand, for the pates, and there was a sugared building covered with conserves and candied fruits. He had near these tall and low candelabra, and the tapers were tipped with white, pink and ruby shades.

The cooking in the White House is done in the kitchens below stairs, and the chief room is directly below the dining room. The White House kitchen consists of two large rooms, hung with cooking utensils of every character and color. Ranges big enough to roast an ox are set into the walls, and on these mammoth kettles and boilers smoke with an appetizing flavor. A big zinc table stands in the center of the room and the cook has a number of assistants. He wears a white cap and an apron, and he takes pride in his calling.

The ices for state dinners usually come on the tables in forms as widely different as the flowers, and an old French woman here has made a fortune in furnishing ices to noted dinner tables. She has supplied the presidents with their ice cream since the days of Buchanan, and she is almost as much of an artist as the chef.—Frank G. Carpenter in New York World.

Talking Keeps Him Warm.

"What is the reason that a street fakir makes so much more noise with his calling asked a reporter of an old time street vender. "Well, you see," he said, it keeps a man warm to talk. You don't believe it, but I tell you it's true. Why it is I never was able to tell; but it is as it is, if it isn't as it ought to be," and he leered gleefully at his play on words. "Why, if I start in to sell with my overcoat on I don't talk five minutes until my blood is steaming and I am on the point of breaking into a perspiration. The first time I discovered this I accused some one in the crowd of having cut me with a knife, but when I took off my boots, as I supposed, to empty the blood out of them, I had to give in, for it was nothing but perspiration. Here you are, madam; a real gold, patent lever, watermolon watch for ten cents. Buy one for the little boy. No buy? Then go by then."—Philadelphia Call.

An Air Purifying Apparatus.

The improved French apparatus for purifying air by imparting to it a rotary motion appears to be a success. This device consists of two horizontal concentric cylinders, placed in connection with a fau, these being fixed and turned with a spindle, and the whole is inclosed in a ensting. The cylinders are closed at the ends, except for a hole permitting the passage of air drawn by a fan, and as the air passes through the concentric space between the drums, it is caused to rotate with them by the presence of feathers running longitudinally on the inside of the onter cylinder.

The spindle which carries the whole arrangement is hollow, and it thus serves to bring the water which is allowed to escape therefrom inside the drum by means of the holes, which project it in the form of rain against the inside of the inner cylinder, also perforated, and the water again escapes from it and is projected against the inside of the outer cylinder, over which it forms a thin coating. The motions of the air and water are as nearly as possible in opposite directions. The water, after it has been sufficiently exposed to the air, is allowed to escape, and is drawn off by means of a siphon. It is impossible for any air to pass through the apparatus without being washed and its solid impurities removed by centrifugal action. and the porportion of water required may be varied, as found necessary with reference to the particular character or condition of the air. - Boston Transcript.

To Close a Car Window. The car window literature is not yet complete. Here is a recent contribution to The New York Tribune, giving instructions how to close a window in front of you without touching it:

"Let any man fold a newspaper so that he holds eight leaves in his hand, then grasping it firmly by the edges, hands apart so as to draw the paper taut, ad-vance it forward as far from him as he reasonably can, resting one hand against the side of the car, and about half way up and down of the open window. One of and down of the open window. One of two things immediately happens. The window closes with a bang, or the back hair of the person sitting by the window flies across the car. The position of the paper can be so innocently attained that no suspicion of the effect need be shown by the holder. Only hold it hard and taut, well forward."
